

Viksit Bharat: A Movement for Change

(By Sanjam Singh Kapoor)

The thinkers, the philosophers of the world have interpreted the world in various ways. However, the point is to change it, said Karl Marx. To change it, what we must not have is a policy, but rather a movement, starting not right now, but 100 years back, that is Viksit Bharat.

The Role of Youth in Amritkal

The prime leaders, the change makers of this movement are going to be the youth, which will be playing as the role of the fuel of this engine of change. The youth would be the one that is going to take us to the Amritkal. Yes, Amritkal is an ideal, but to approach an ideal is the way how we will be seeing a future that is for the better.

Revolutionizing the Industry

And surely, we can see around us these examples of quick commerce industry and the artificial intelligence industry, how they are revolutionizing the unorganized sector to create formal jobs. And I'm very much proud to say this statistic that almost 1.6 lakh startups are currently registered on the government portal.

Education and Civil Society

I was delighted to attend a talk show recently, which addressed the role of civil society organizations for the role of Viksit Bharat, where key dignitaries like Amod Kanth addressed the new education policy. And I was very delighted to know that how this new education policy is resolving the problem of the curriculum of the education, which is rooted in the British side and creating something that represents our national identity of being an Indian. I was again, very, intrigued to know that over 3.7 million NGOs are currently registered in India, which are fostering sustainable development and are constantly making the improvement for the sustainable development indicators.

A Call to Action

To close my speech, I would like to close it with Swamiji's of muscles of iron and nerves of steel is now alive, arise, awake and innovate.

Stop not until Viksit Bharat is achieved.
